The mother of white supremacist Richard Spencer claims she is suffering financially due to the backlash against her son's controversial views.

Sherry Spencer, who lives in Whitefish, Montana, said she is being forced to sell a building she owns in the small town because residents are rebelling against her son.

Richard Spencer shot to prominence last month when footage emerged of him delivering a 'hateful speech' at a white nationalist meeting held to celebrate Donald Trump's election win.

A video by The Atlantic taken inside the Ronald Reagan building showed Spencer, leader of the National Policy Institute, shouting, 'Hail Trump, hail our people, hail victory!' as some of the people in attendance lifted their hands in a Nazi salute.

He also claimed America belongs to white people, who he suggested are faced with the decision to either 'conquer or die'.

The speech drew intense criticism from the US Holocaust Memorial Museum, which said in a statement Spencer made: 'several direct and indirect references to Jews and other minorities, often alluding to Nazism.'

'As painful as this is, I am exploring a potential sale of the building,' she said.

She also took aim at a local human rights group, Love Lives Here, and accused it of damaging her family.

'We are stunned by the actions of Love Lives Here, an organization claiming to advocate tolerance and equal treatment of all citizens, yet causing financial harm to many innocent parties,' she said.

Love Lives Here also responded to Sherry's remarks, saying it 'did not know what she (was) talking about'.

'We don't cause financial harm to anybody,' co-founder Ina Albert said, before going on to say the group does not have a specific problem with the Spencers.

'I don't know what (Richard) does when he comes here. But that is not our problem with Richard Spencer.'

Many in the audience for Spencer's speech raised their hands in Nazi salutes during the address

'It is the National Policy Institute and what that stands for and our town being smeared by his philosophy.'

The National Policy Institute was established in 2005 by Spencer, and it is described by the Southern Poverty Law Center as 'hate group'.

Gersh went on to call for Sherry to sell the building immediately, and then use the money to help human rights causes.

'(She) Could address this by selling the building, making a donation to human rights efforts, and making a statement in opposition to white supremacist ideas spread by Richard,' Gersh said.

Sherry Spencer also told the network she loves her son, but does now agree with his 'extreme positions'.

DailyMail.com contacted Richard Spencer for comment.
